

The Value of Your MTSU College Degree is at Risk!

Charles Manning, Chancellor of the Tennessee Board of Regents, is proposing a radical new “Business Model,” which includes, among other things:

- Different costs for different majors, with “less productive” majors costing more.
- A reduction in the number of academic work scholarships, so that funds may be distributed among all students.
- Required enrollment in a set number of online courses for all students.
- Elimination of “low-producing” programs and course offerings.

If you feel that these proposals are cause for alarm, please join us in our fight against this “business model.” Charles Manning will be speaking at the Murphy Center on Saturday, December 13th, and we invite you to join with us there in protest at 12:00p.m. Every voice counts.
